Sommers in talks to direct 'Tarzan'

Stuart Beattie to write script for WB, Weintraub

Stephen Sommers is in negotiations to direct a bigscreen version of "Tarzan" for Warner Bros. and producer Jerry Weintraub. Sommers will also co-write the "Tarzan" script with Stuart Beattie. Sommers directed the recently wrapped "G.I. Joe" for Paramount, with Beattie penning the final draft of the screenplay. [Sommers is probably best known for the Brendan Fraser Mummy movies.]

Warner Bros. and Weintraub have been developing "Tarzan" since 2003, when John August was hired to pen a new take on the Edgar Rice Burroughs-created character. Two years ago, the studio was negotiating with Guillermo del Toro to direct.

Burroughs' "Tarzan of the Apes" was written in 1912. Onscreen, the ape-man character became strongly identified with Johnny Weissmuller during the 1930s in MGM's series of features.

Warner Bros. put the character back on the bigscreen with its 1984 pic "Greystoke: The Legend of Tarzan, Lord of the Apes," starring Christopher Lambert. Warner Bros. and Village Roadshow also made 1998's "Tarzan and the Lost City," starring Casper Van Dien. In 2003, Warner Bros. TV produced a short-lived "Tarzan" skein for the WB Network.

Beattie's other credits include "Collateral," the "Pirates of the Caribbean" franchise and Baz Luhrmann's upcoming "Australia."

Weissmuller Stamp Exhibit

Some of you may recall that our Italian Burroughs Bibliophile from Milano, Camillo Moscati, mounted a large exhibition at the Parabiago Museum of Postal History. One of his special collections of stamps and postcards featured the 100th anniversary of the birth of Tarzan actor Johnny Weissmuller (1904-2004), so he sent us some color photos of his extensive collection.

I wish we could publish them in color, but we hope they will be clear enough to give you an idea of the European celebration of Weissmuller.

The exhibit also featured glossy photos and signatures of Weissmuller and Maureen O'Sullivan to broaden the scope of his presentation. It was very well received in the Parbiago-Milanese area.
